

Another story idea

Felix opened a door, on the other side was brightness, grass, flowers, and trees flowing like water on a windy day he walked up a hill and saw a large tower in the distance

He turned around and got knocked out when he woke up his head was forced down in boiling water, and the water got into his eyes making him blind at least at the time

He felt pain especially on his legs, the creature who did it was towering over him, he beat him down until the sheer pain itself knocked him out again

When he woke up he was in a room with a single sword across the room

It was dark, only lit with a single candle

Someone screamed out something in a language he couldn't quite understand the door opened

He could barely stand up, his legs were weakened he could barely move without falling over

But his willpower allowed him to walk forwards, every step felt like a glass shard not only piercing the bottom of his feet but also climbing up inside his legs like twisted worms eating away at his flesh

He took the sword and walked out of the room, there was a long hallway leading to bright light, and the sound of cheering was heard from the distance

He walked on forwards and saw something unbelievable a gladiator with wings popping out from her back, two swords and bird claws instead of human feet

She looked furious until when she saw him clearly, she looked upset, she looked scared and disgusted

he looked around and there was no human in sight in the crowd, just creatures he only witnessed in fantasy stories

He tried to walk closer to her but every time he would fall over, the pain was immeasurable, especially when he'd touch his head

He pointed his finger at her, then the claws on her legs and then he swiped three of his fingers on his neck

That was enough to make her walk backward in shock

It looked like she wanted none of it

The emperor stood up and screamed out for the battle to begin

They had no choice

He knew what she was going to do and he was having none of it, he didn't want her to deal with what those monsters were doing so he wanted to die knowing that it would free her and relieve him from his pain, he knew he had no chance of getting out of this world alive

She looked like she was about to drop her swords but he ran towards her with all his might, pushed her down head first, took the swords, and threw it in the opposite direction

Making it look like he was the one throwing the swords away for an advantage than her giving up the battle

He put his hands up in front of his face making himself look like a boxer

He knew she wouldn't want to damage him with swords but maybe fists would be better

She looked confused

He threw a punch and she was taken off guard by this, she didn't know what was happening

He realized she had no idea how to fight hand-to-hand combat so as he was fighting he was giving obvious hints about how to fight so that she'd catch on and repeat it

Like how he moved his hand back and slowly closed his fist showing her the proper way she needs to have her fists closed

Or how he'd pull his arms up in front of his face to show that she could defend herself like that as if she was using flesh shields

Over time she caught on to what he was trying to teach her but her instinct was still to fight with swords so she sometimes accidentally tried to swipe or lunge instead of trying to hit him since she had longer legs she was able to dash forward much more quickly which allowed her to grab him by the head like he did to her before and put him down on the ground, then she put her claws on both of his legs to make it look like she was trapping him

She looked up to the audience

And the audience made a thumbs down they started screaming about how boring it was and that there should be more gore, blood, and pain or that she wouldn't be freed

She pushed one of her claws deep into another, gashing out blood in the process, then she put her claw on his neck, tore his skin and some of his flesh, and her blood poured on him leaving a believable death wound

She whispered to him something in a language that he couldn't understand but since she didn't kill him he knew she wanted him alive

At that point, it was up to him, his battle of trying to stay calm and stable while he was being dragged away

He didn't know he was going to be thrown into a pile of bodies, buried or cremated but he trusted her, he decided that if she would feel too bad to kill him he would stay alive for her to not make himself sweat in the heat of the corridors he breathed much less and kept his body numb

He couldn't keep himself stable enough for long however

After the guards dragged him close to a door with the sounds of lions roaring and scratching against the door he took off the shirt he was being dragged with and ran away the princess was in the room on the ceiling hoping to lift him up quickly after they'd throw him in and climb away with him to escape which is why the lions were trying to catch her and roaring while the guards thought they were hungrier than usual

After she heard the guards freaking out and chasing him she knew it was time for plan B

he couldn't run that long without them catching up however he felt him losing weight and being lifted up into the sky

She swooped in to fly him away

The archers saw her trying to save him and shot arrows at him, she covered him with her wings before they hit plummeting them both down into the forest

He lifted her and ran away

She helped out a little by running as well, her legs were like that of an ostrich so she was able to walk slightly faster even though she was weakened as well, since they knew they'd be caught if they tried to outrun them they ran to a different direction and hid behind big rocks he wanted to thank her for saving him but he didn't know her language so he tried to communicate his thankfulness by shaking her hand and after realizing she didn't know that either he just gave her a hug tapped her on the shoulder and awkwardly sat away from her she did feel something when he hugged her though so she did the same thing to him but for longer

He didn't know if it was because she wanted to support him or just to make herself feel better but he was happy nonetheless she would try to teach him basic words of her language and after that tell him her name (I still don't know about the name part)

we would find out that the knights looking for her called her a princess after he overheard them trying to find her

Later we would find out that she wasn't royalty, she pretended to be the real princess surrendering to take the attention of the archers before they would kill everyone in sight including the real royalty

The bird people were the only humanoid people on this planet so when she saw him barely walking she thought they cut his wings and legs off and replaced them with that of an orc's, making him have to get ready to his center of mass AND walk around with legs that he wasn't born with in reality, he was a human being but she would find that out later when he would take off the long shoes he was wearing revealing that his legs weren't green but the same color as his skin so she would find out he was just naturally like this and that she felt more sorry for him than she should've even though she still found out that he left his home and he couldn't get back to his life again

Every fantasy creature in this world hated the bird people because they look very close to the demons who flew out of the ground and massacred their land thousands of years ago

So they started being racist, aggressive, and mean towards them leading to countless wars just because they had wings on their backs after he'd find out he would want to kill them all because there was no way that any word would get through them and they'd continue believing in what they believed because they were too cowardly to believe in the truth and think high and mighty about themselves and their belief in their understanding of everything he listened to his rage and frustration towards them because he was treated the same way they were and knew how painful it was while she thought that was the reason wars were continuing and trying to rationalize with them and explain to them what's wrong should be the correct thing to do

She followed her moral belief that no matter how bad you are if you realize the truth and allow yourself to believe it anyone can change